Monkey business.

There are stories of a monkey (we don't know what species) living by a level crossing in Arboleas from some time in the 1970s to the 1990s. His home was a dog kennel and he was chained to an olive tree. Apparently, he became somewhat of an attraction, and passengers brought peanuts and pipas to give him, which he rewarded by throwing stones (and knowing monkeys, other materials) at the trains. Thank you to José Antonio for the information. Anyone who knows anything about this primate, please let me know.

Well, this will be the last newsletter as we now have the web site of the museum where all news will be recorded.

We will be working at the station on Tuesday if you want to come and lend some support.

Don't forget to check out the web site (www.zrm.es) regularly, as we will be continually updating it. I would also really appreciate some feedback - positive or negative - so that we can improve it. I think that it is an important means of bringing custom to the area in the, hopefully, near future.

Regards

Max
